April 2013

Dear Pro-Life Supporter,

As a result of a recent CBR Genocide Awareness Project (GAP) visit to the University of Tennessee, a pregnant student and her child's father saw our abortion photos and decided not to abort their baby. You, our donor partner, make it possible for CBR (with our team of tough lawyers) to shove our way past angry university administrators and bring the truth to students who are being misled by professors. And professors aren't the only cultural elites who are suppressing evidence that abortion is a horrifying act of violence.

Mail.co.uk reported an unusually candid abortion story April 6, 2013 headlined "'Fetuses and blood all over the place': Medic's graphic account of 'be-heading live babies' at abortion 'House of Horrors' in Philadelphia." The article details the sickening testimony of a worker at the Kermit Gosnell Philadelphia extermination clinic. He says he "... routinely saw babies born alive and killed with scissors." Only a few other media outlets covered the trial and those which did described the executions of "hundreds" of newborns, some "breathing," and "moving," and "screeching" and "jumping," as their spinal cords were severed by stabbing them to death at the bases of their necks. The April 6 article appeared in a British newspaper because the American press was largely ignoring the story until a few honest journalists shamed mainstream news organizations into grudging coverage. Wags have speculated that U.S. reporters would have become obsessed with the story had the victims been puppies instead of babies, and/or, had the killers been right-wing extremists firing assault rifles instead of abortionists slashing with surgical instruments.

Please search "Gregg Cunningham" on YouTube and watch CBR's presentation of abortion video in a large church service. Send the link to your pastor and urge him to watch and invite Gregg Cunningham to speak.

The pro-aborts' propaganda line is that Gosnell is an aberration. But, of course, he's not. Lila Rose has just released a related Live Action undercover video, and this one features a late-term abortionist assuring a potential customer that if her viable "fetus" survives his attempt to kill it inside the womb, he would make certain that it won't survive for very long outside the womb. Public health authorities have almost always turned a blind eye toward even the worst abortion clinic abuses. An occasional butchered mother has traditionally been viewed as a small price to pay to ensure that no clinic is ever forced to close its doors. Better bad abortions than no abortions, right? Our Infanticide President is willing to kill as many newborns as necessary to block any limits on abortion rights, and state health regulators are willing to kill as many mothers as necessary to keep even the worst clinics open. But Gosnell's sadistic atrocities have made the horror of abortion much more difficult for society to ignore. The Wall Street Journal's James Taranto, for instance, wrote an opinion piece on April 15, 2013 headlined "From Roe to Gosnell." Mr. Taranto refers to PJMedia.com's Roger L. Simon and asserts that "The trial of Dr. Gosnell is a potential time bomb exploding in the conventional liberal narrative on abortion itself. He [Simon] demonstrates via self-reflection:"

I can give you two guinea pigs to prove this point--my wife Sheryl and me. We were in the kitchen last night, preparing dinner, when we saw a short report of this story on the countertop TV. Both lifelong 'pro-choice' people, after watching only seconds, we embarked in an immediate discussion of whether it was time to reconsider that view. (Didn't human life really begin at the moment of conception? What other time?) Neither of us was comfortable as a 'pro-choice' advocate in the face of these horrifying revelations. How could we be?

Mr. Simon ends by concluding that "... I don't think I'm 'pro-choice' anymore, but I'm not really 'pro-life' either." Turning 90 degrees isn't 180 but it's a clear pivot away from the darkness and toward the light. Horrifying word pictures were the catalyst which changed his moral course. Now we will use our horrifying abortion pictures to turn him -- and others similarly influenced by the Gosnell trial -- the rest of the way. Thankfully, he and his wife are not alone in being forced to think about this atrocity. Pathos.com, April 12, 2013, also featured a post which said "WPost reporter explains her personal Gosnell blackout." This story again notes the transformational nature of the Gosnell prosecution: "J.D. Mullane, a news writer and columnist for the Bucks County Courier Times, The Intel and the Burlington County (NJ) Times ... says [on Twitter]: 'Sat through a full day of testimony at the Kermit Gosnell trial today. It is beyond the most morbid Hollywood horror. It will change you.'" Correct. We use abortion horror to change people every day. Because actually, all abortions are beyond the most morbid Hollywood horror. If Mr. Mullane thinks minds can be changed by listening to mere words, he should experience the truly mind-changing power of our pictures. Those pictures reveal the terrible truth that Gosnell is no more monstrous than the thousands of other abortionists who daily torture babies to death.

LifeSiteNews.com made that point on April 10, 2013, by posting a story headlined "'Meat-market': Planned Parenthood nurses allege filthy, dangerous conditions." The article said: "The same Planned Parenthood abortion clinic where a grandmother was attacked earlier this year (to take her camera away from her) while documenting a botched abortion, operated under dangerous conditions similar to those that existed at Kermit Gosnell's Philadelphia 'House of Horrors,' according to two former nurses who have now come forward to tell what they saw." And there's more. LifeNews.com, May 8, 2013, posted a story headlined "Late-Term Abortion Doc Caught Comparing Unborn Baby to 'Meat in a Crock Pot'" which described an even newer Live Action undercover video detailing an interview with late-term abortionist LeRoy Carhart: "He casually described the abortion as a 'shot into the fetus' [injecting a drug used to execute death row inmates] to ensure that '[i]t'll be dead for two days before you deliver it.' He told her the injection also causes the baby to '[get] soft, like mushy [makes squishing sound], so you push it through ... so it's like putting meat in a crock pot.' If this method is unsuccessful, he would have to remove the baby 'in pieces' ...."

Anti-abortion activists often equate abortion clinics with slaughterhouses and in that connection, Harper's Magazine, May 2013, published a cover story which the faint of heart would do well to avoid, headlined "The way of all flesh," with a sub-headline which read "Undercover in an industrial slaughterhouse." The article described the lengths to which workers who slaughter and butcher cattle will go to conceal from their bovine victims the fate which awaits them. "First the cattle are weighed. Then they are guided into narrow outdoor pens, angled diagonally toward the entrance to the kill floor." At this point, the real deception begins. "When their time comes, the cattle will be urged by workers toward the curving ramp which leads up to the building. The ramp has a roof and no sharp turns. It is designed by the livestock expert Temple Grandin, and the curves and penumbral [subdued] light ... sooth the animals in their final moments."

Abortionists use similar tactics to sooth expectant mothers as they herd them toward the entrance of the clinic "kill floor." As I have noted elsewhere, The New York Times, nyt.com, December 30, 2000, published a feature article concerning abortionist Renee Chelian, the owner of a chain of Michigan abortion clinics which slaughters and butchers babies (who sued us -- quite unsuccessfully -- for producing a parody video which mocked her abortion sales video). The story was headlined "As Abortion Rate Decreases, Clinics Compete for Patients." The lead sentence explains the desperate greed which drives Ms. Chelian's obsession with camouflaging the horror which awaits her human victims. “Renee Chelian was worried about her business. With competitors charging lower prices, she needed something special to draw customers. So she created an almost spa-like atmosphere at her offices, with low light in the rooms, aromatherapy, candles and relaxing music.” I often remark that this sort of cynical manipulation is reminiscent of the gas chambers camouflaged as “showers” in Himmler’s death camps -- but with far more cooperative victims, many of whom are willfully self-delusional. Abortion clinic operators would be convicted of consumer fraud in a sane world. Kermit Gosnell, however, didn’t need to defraud his “abortion” customers to be competitive. His hook was his gleeful willingness to kill newborn babies and call it “reproductive choice.” On May 13, Gosnell was convicted on 3 counts of first-degree murder of 3 babies born alive. I would not be surprised to learn that on some secluded golf course at some luxurious destination resort, our Infanticide President is already plotting the timing of a Presidential Pardon for this poor, persecuted humanitarian. Isn’t that a reasonable suspicion in light of the LifeSiteNews.com story posted April 26, 2013 and headlined “Obama takes swipe at pro-life activists, ignores [baby-butcher] Gosnell [trial] during Planned Parenthood speech.” Our Infanticide President, who claims to be Christian, ended his praise for America’s largest abortion provider by saying, “God bless Planned Parenthood.”

Please designate CBR as a beneficiary of your will or trust. The abortion industry receives hundreds of millions of dollars from the estates of their supporters, but we receive virtually no help from estate planning.

Mr. Obama’s blasphemous abortion prayers may be part of the reason USA Today.com, July 25, 2012, reported a story headlined “Gallup Poll: 44% don’t know Obama’s religion.” Despite his carefully contrived references to his supposed Christian faith, just 34% of Americans identify him as a Christian. It isn’t that people haven’t heard his claims. It’s that his claims aren’t believable -- especially against the background of his advocacy of infanticide (made manifest in his repeated opposition to legislation which would strengthen protections for late-term babies who are born alive after botched attempts to kill them in the womb). I can’t know his heart but I can see his actions. Matthew 7:15-16 says: “Beware of false prophets, who come disguised as harmless sheep but inwardly are ravenous wolves. You can identify them by their fruit, that is, by the way they act. Can you pick grapes from thornbushes, or figs from thistles?”

The president’s Planned Parenthood speech consisted of false accusations that pro-lifers are trying to deny women access to health care (by which he meant baby-killing services), including contraception (by which he meant that we are stingy misers if we aren’t willing to pay for the birth control pills demanded -- for free -- by Sandra Fluke, the grasping, unmarried, thirty-something Georgetown law student, who thinks taxpayers should be forced to subsidize her libertine lifestyle). Jeremiah 7:31 pours forth God’s anger over child sacrifice: “[T]hey burn their sons and daughters in the fire. I have never commanded such a horrible deed; it never even crossed my mind to command such a thing!” Perhaps Mr. Obama should heed Galatians 6:7, which warns that “God will not be mocked,” and Ecclesiastes 8:11, which warns that “Because the sentence against an evil deed is not executed speedily, the heart of the children of man is fully set to do evil,” and Proverbs 29:1, which warns that “He who is often reprov’d, yet stiffens his neck, will suddenly be broken beyond healing.”

CNN.com ran a related article September 28, 2010, headlined “Obama questioned on abortion, why he is a Christian.” The Infanticide President said he became Christian because he wanted to live a life characterized by “being my brothers’ and sisters’ keeper.” This from a politician who believes doctors should be able to kill Mr. Obama’s full-term, newborn “brothers and sisters” outside the womb.

He said “... families -- not the government -- ‘should be the ones making the [abortion] decision.’” Racists, of course, once argued that (white) families -- not the government -- should be the ones making the slavery decision. Mr. Obama failed to mention, however, his approval for government bureaucrats stripping families of their right to participate in pregnancy decisions by facilitating taxpayer-funded abortions for minor children, performed behind the backs of their parents. He also said, “Restrictions against late-term abortion are in place now ... adding that ‘people still argue and disagree about it. That’s part of our Democratic tradition.’” People will argue and disagree? Those who disagree with protections against infanticide aren’t “people.” They are barbarians -- of the most savage sort. Mr. Obama is intentionally misleading voters by pretending that this debate is about “late-term abortion” instead of his support for the killing of born children. That is why he avoids any mention of his opposition to “restrictions against late-term abortions,” which might grant health care access to babies who survive failed attempts to kill them.

Please let us know if you will host a coffee and dessert for friends and family members who might be interested in supporting CBR. I am eager to personally make a presentation at your home.

One such survivor, named Melissa Ohden, now an adult, appeared in a heartbreaking political ad produced by the pro-life Susan B. Anthony’s List in the fall of 2012. Available on YouTube and titled “How will you answer?” the ad features Ms. Ohden describing our Infanticide President’s four votes against legislation which would have protected newborns from abortionists’ second attempts to kill them -- now outside the womb -- after failed attempts to kill them inside. Ms. Ohden is a victim of abortion and therefore has the moral authority to condemn it as compellingly as a freed slave could condemn slavery. Planned Parenthood isn’t troubled over Mr. Obama’s infanticide fetish because they also support neonatal executions. WeeklyStandard.com, March 29, 2013, posted a story headlined “Video: Planned Parenthood Official Argues for Right to Post-Birth Abortion.” “Alisa LaPolt Snow, the lobbyist representing the Florida Alliance of Planned Parenthood Affiliates, testified that her organization believes the decision to kill an infant who survives a failed abortion should be left up to the woman seeking an abortion and her abortion doctor.” No one at Planned Parenthood’s national headquarters has publicly disavowed her remarks.

The partial-birth abortion debate helped turn public opinion against late-term abortion. The Gosnell trial and similar revelations regarding the atrocities of other late-term baby butchers help reinforce that opposition. But CBR is engaged in persuading the public that tearing apart a seven-week embryo -- with a suction machine -- is every bit as horrifying as cutting the spinal cord of a twenty-seven-week newborn. We will never outlaw abortion until the public realizes that no meaningful moral distinction can be drawn between late-term abortions (where a relatively small percentage of killing occurs) and first-trimester abortions, (where ninety percent of the killing occurs). Our abortion pictures have the impact of a Gosnell trial which never ends! A WashingtonExaminer.com May 10, 2013 article headlined “Gallup shock: Just 7% following Kermit Gosnell abortion trial ‘very closely’” said “... even among those closely following the trial and extended jury deliberations ... just 46 percent want more coverage while 47 percent believe the media is providing enough or too much coverage.” People are in willful denial about abortion. They know little and want to keep it that way. CBR teaches them anyway. Please help us expand our abortion photo displays on campuses and near businesses (which support Planned Parenthood) and churches (which refuse to effectively oppose Planned Parenthood)! Will you host a gathering at which I might ask your friends to help us do this vital work?

Lord bless,
